Hiraya

Menu Marketing Strategy & Curated Draft

How to make Hiraya's menu more attractive and distinctive for a conservative Swiss clientele — without losing the brand's Filipino-Japanese identity.

ACTIONS TO IMPLEMENT

The Swiss consumer's primary purchase decision is built on trust. Hiraya's brand is built on surprise. Managing the gap between these two is the entire marketing job. The menu must speak trust first — then earn permission to be surprising.

LEVER 01

Retire the word "Fusion" — own the brand name

"Fusion" signals trendy concept to Swiss diners, activating skepticism rather than appetite. Swiss consumers eat at places that feel established, not experimental. Naming the category after the restaurant itself signals ownership, craft and permanence.

"Fusion Rolls" → "Hiraya Rolls"

LEVER 02

Turn the raw fish problem into a selling point

A significant portion of conservative Swiss diners are curious about sushi but held back by raw fish. Currently this audience is invisible in the menu. Add a discreet cooking indicator to every item (R = roh, G = gegart, F = flambiert) and give the cooked-only option a proper story rather than hiding it in small print.

Add R · G · F indicators to all items

LEVER 03

Speak German — consistently

The menu currently mixes English names, German descriptions, and Japanese terms without a clear logic. Swiss trust is partly linguistic: "Lachs" reads as craftsmanship; "Salmon" reads as imported marketing copy. Japanese sushi terms (Nigiri, Hosomaki, Temaki) are fine — they're trusted vocabulary. Everything else should be German-first.

"Salmon" → "Lachs" · "Shrimp" → "Crevetten" · "Tuna" → "Thun"

LEVER 04

Tell one story per section — not a list

Swiss consumers trust expertise and curation. Each section should carry a short, confident intro that explains the philosophy — not just the contents. One or two sentences. Authoritative voice. First person ("unsere", "Gerwins Auswahl") rather than impersonal.

New intro copy for all 4 sections

LEVER 05

Reorder sections to match the Swiss decision journey

Swiss diners scan for anchors before they explore. Starting with Starters gives the hesitant customer an easy first "yes" before committing to the full experience. The current order (Rolls first) throws them straight into the most unfamiliar territory.

New order: Starters → Hiraya Rolls → Sets → Poke & Bento

"Hiraya should not market itself as a Filipino-Japanese fusion restaurant. It should market itself as the sushi restaurant that Gerwin built."

Swiss consumers trust people over concepts. Every premium artisan brand in Switzerland — bakers, butchers, winemakers — is built around a named individual. It is the oldest marketing playbook in the country, and it works precisely because it is rare in the restaurant category.

"Fusion" is a concept. Gerwin is a person. Every touchpoint — the website, the menu, the social — should carry a human signature. Not "we" or "the team": Gerwin. A specific palate, a specific point of view, a specific reason to come back.

SECTION ORDER — NEW VS. CURRENT

CURRENT ORDER

- 1. Fusion Rolls — throws hesitant diners straight into the deep end
- 2. Poke & Bento
- 3. Sets
- 4. Starters & Specials

RECOMMENDED ORDER

- 1 Starters & Specials
Easy first "yes" — familiar, low commitment
- 2 Hiraya Rolls
Now warmed up — ready for the signature experience
- 3 Sushi Sets
Decision shortcut — curated, no overwhelm
- 4 Poke & Bento
The adventurous option — earned by now

ACTIONS REQUIRED

QUICK WINS — LOW EFFORT

- Rename "Fusion Rolls" → "Hiraya Rolls" across all languages

LOW
- Rename "Vip Roll" → "Patron Roll" and "Mix Big Roll" → "Hausmix Roll"

LOW
- Add R · G · F cooking indicators to all 29 items

LOW
- Standardise ingredient language to German (Lachs, Thun, Crevetten)

LOW
- Reorder sections: Starters → Hiraya Rolls → Sets → Poke & Bento

LOW

MEDIUM EFFORT — HIGHER IMPACT

- Rewrite all 4 section intro texts in German (drafts in this report)

MEDIUM
- Translate new intros and item descriptions into FR · IT · EN

MEDIUM

STRATEGIC — HIGHEST ROI

- Position Gerwin as the named chef across all website and social touchpoints — name, photo, one-line philosophy

HIGH

ONE ACTION ITEM BEFORE LAUNCH

Commission a photo for Fisch Sashimi. It is the highest price point in Starters & Specials (ab CHF 15) and the only item in the renovated menu without a photo. A strong image here reinforces the premium positioning of the Specials section and completes the visual story of the menu.

All removed items remain fully orderable on Just Eat.

Hosomaki, Nigiri, Classic Sushi Rolls, and the 4 cut sets and starters are all still available on the Just Eat platform. The website renovation is a brand decision, not a product decision. Zero revenue impact.
